

IDSS ASETEL 2022. Drama & Performance: Theatre & Audiovisual Arts at the crisis and the limit of the real

IV International Summer School ASETEL: Drama & Performance. Theatre & Audiovisual Arts at the crisis and the limit of the real.

THIS YEAR SUMMER SCHOOL

This Year Summer School ASETEL focus on theatre, film and performance linked to the issue of fiction and the real as well as the methodological boundaries to those two aspects in relation to intermediality and transmediality. The thematic area selected for this third edition of the School responds to the need to tackle — from different methodologies and areas: theatre, drama, performance, intermediality and transmediality — a relevant space among the most recent trends in Literary Theory and Comparative Literature, while being transversal enough to appeal students coming from different disciplinary profiles (Humanities and Social Sciences).

The School aims to provide the consortium of doctorate programs with a cutting edge international doctoral activity through visiting researchers linked to ASETEL.

The School offers its participants a unique opportunity by providing direct contact with leading international figures and national specialist researchers belonging to the ASETEL network and the Doctoral School in Humanities, Social and Legal Sciences (UGR) in the research domain selected.

The School offer our students the possibility of presenting the research plan of their doctoral thesis projects in order to receive feedback from the invited professors such as tutor teachers and chairs (both from ASETEL and from the participating EIP doctoral programs).

It also enables the students with the formation of a research network among the participants themselves, multiplying their contacts on both a national and an international level. They will benefit greatly from this in their future as researchers.

Last but not least, it provides guidance on the development of the academic career, as well as information on possibilities and better options for the publication and dissemination of each doctoral thesis in its specific field of study, these being theoretical-literary, comparative, cultural studies, etc.

RECIPIENTS

Young students (Master, PhD candidates, postdoc) researching Literary Theory and Comparative Literature, Drama Studies, Theatre and Performance Studies as well as Film Studies or other areas and disciplines related to Literary Studies or Social Sciences linked to Communication, whose research project can benefit from theoretical-methodological perspectives belonging to intermediality and transmediality studies. The School aims to PhD candidates, Master degree students, post doctoral researchers.

Languages of the school: the seminars and workshops taught by invited foreign professors will be held in English, but the School will use both English and Spanish as its languages of communication.

The academic teaching activities will be programmed over the course of a week, having opted for a calendar that covers two weeks and a weekend, in order to also facilitate the experience of getting to know the cultural environment that will house the school (city of Granada).
