

Master's dissertation

Master's degrees comprise between 60 and 120 ECTS credits and include all the theoretical and practical training that students must receive: compulsory and elective courses, seminars, work placements, supervised work, a master's dissertation, assessment activities and other courses that may be required depending on the nature of each degree.

A master's degree concludes with the writing and public defence of a master's dissertation, which comprises between 6 and 30 ECTS credits.

More information about master's dissertations:

- Regulations for Master's Degrees at the University of Granada (approved by the UGR Governing Council on 18 May 2015)

To help assess master's dissertation competences at the UGR, the Working Group for Competences of the University of Granada has developed the following rubrics:

- Assessment instruments